BAHRAIN

DR. ABDUL-JALIL AL-SINGACE, a professor of engineering at the University of Bahrain, was arrested on August 13, 2010 on his way back to Bahrain from the United Kingdom, where he had given a speech about the human rights situation in his country. He was subsequently held incommunicado for two weeks, during which time he claims he and other detainees were severely tortured. Al-Singace is the spokesman and director of the Human Rights Bureau of the Haq Movement for Civil Liberties and Democracy, an opposition political organization with support from the Shiite community in Bahrain. According to Human Rights Watch, several other members of the Haq Movement were arrested shortly after al-Singace, and when finally given access to their lawyers on August 27 and 28, they all reported being tortured. The torture, which the lawyers claimed was visible on their bodies, included severe beatings, being forced to stand for long periods, being suspended by their hands, application of electric shocks, and deprivation of food, water, and sleep. The Bahrain Center for Human Rights has reported that the government has issued a ban on publications about the case of Dr. al-Singace and the other detainees.

IRAN

EMADEDDIN BAGHI, a well-known Iranian scholar and human rights defender whom we have often featured in previous issues, was sentenced in July and September 2010 to a total of seven years in prison on charges related to the formation of an organization to defend prisoners' rights and for recording an interview with a reformist cleric, Baghi, who was only just released on June 23, 2010. After spending five months in solitary confinement without charge, Baghi will now return to jail. He is at grave risk due to a heart condition for which he has been refused treatment during previous imprisonments.

JA'FAR KAZEMI, a textbook lithographer at Amir Kabir University in Tehran, was arrested in September 2009 for participating in the protests that followed the disputed presidential elections, and for his alleged contact with the banned organization the People's Mojahedin of Iran. In April 2010 he was sentenced to death for "enmity against God" and "propaganda against the regime" and according to Amnesty International his last appeal to this sentence was rejected by the Supreme Court in July. He is now at imminent risk of being executed. An online petition on his behalf can be accessed through the Endangered Scholars Worldwide website.

Scholars featured in previous issues who remain in prison in Iran include MAJID TAVAKOLI, BAHAREH HEDAYAT, and MILAD ASADI, distinguished student activists sentenced to eight-and-a-half, nine-and-a-half, and seven years, respectively, for their involvement in 2009 anti-government protests; DR. MOSTAFA ALAVI, an Iranian doctor and researcher sentenced to 15 years imprisonment in August 2008 for "plotting against the regime"; DRS. ARASH and KAMIAR ALAEI, two AIDS researchers who were sentenced to three and six years, respectively, in January 2009 for "seeking to overthrow the government"; and BEHROOZ JAVID-TEHRANI, a student activist and prisoners' rights campaigner who was sentenced to seven years in jail in 2005. All of these people are at risk of torture and need your support.

LIBYA

RASHEED MOHAMMAD OMAR EL-MEHEESY, a professor of law at Misurata University in Zilten City, Libya, was arrested on May, 19, 2010, accused of sexual harassment by several students. Mr. El-Meheesy was the head of a committee investigating the issuance of fake diplomas at the university and, in that capacity, had expelled several students and fired 11 faculty members. Among those accusing him of sexual assault were some of the recently expelled students. According to the newspaper OEA Libya, on June 1st, one of the students withdrew the claim that she was harassed and another stated that the claim was made under the coercion of fellow students. On the 19th of May, Mr. El-Meheesy was placed in an overcrowded cell without access to his heart medication. While in jail he suffered a stroke, but was not taken to the hospital until he lost consciousness, and was handcuffed to his bed while in hospital. He was released on bail on June 21st and his trial is due for September 20th.

RUSSIA

IGOR SUTYAGIN, the imprisoned Russian scientist we have supported since our first Endangered Scholars feature (Fall 2007), was released on July 9, 2010 as part of a “spy swap” between the United States and Russia. Throughout his 11-year imprisonment Sutyagin consistently denied the accusation of espionage made against him, pointing out that the information he was accused of passing to foreign companies was from open sources, and since his release the US government has confirmed that they have never considered him an agent. Sutyagin, currently staying in the UK, has vowed to clear his name and return to Russia.

VIETNAM

PHAM MINH HOANG, a mathematics lecturer at Ho Chi Minh City Polytechnic Institute, was arrested on August 13, 2010, on charges of participating in a banned pro-democracy opposition group, the Viet Tan. According to media reports, the arrest followed the interrogation two days earlier of Professor Hoang and his wife at a police station in Ho Chi Minh City, where he was told that he would be arrested if he did not confess to belonging to the Viet Tan. Scholars at Risk has reported that Professor Hoang was taken to an undisclosed location, where he has been since held without access to family or his lawyer.

A previously featured scholar who remains in jail in Vietnam is TRAN KHAI THANH THUY, a novelist and essayist arrested in October 2009 after she publicly defended six dissidents facing trial. In February 2010 she was sentenced to 42 months in prison.

MOROCCO

Three Moroccan teachers, AZEDDINE SLIMANI, ABDELLAH BELLA, and MOHAMED TLEMCANI, were arrested on June 28, 2010, for allegedly kidnapping and threatening a former member of the Islamic organization Justice and Spirituality. Human Rights Watch and the Network for Education and Academic Rights have reported that the three men, along with four others taken into custody, claim to have been kept naked and without food in individual cells, and that the police have beaten and sexually abused them, and shocked them with electricity. Human Rights Watch has noted that these arrests appear to be part of a wave of repression carried out against Justice and Spirituality, a large religious opposition group in Morocco whose legality is contested by the government.
